A seashell

When Jack was five his family took him on a vacation. They went to Spain and Jack didn't like that at all. "That's too far from home," the boy cried to his mother. "That is, honey," she answered him with a small smile that made Jack ashamed of his tears. However, his sadness didn't last long.

"Fine, I'll go find a pretty seashell for Kitty!" he thought. Kitty was his lovely Persian cat, the most beautiful one in existence.

Jack went straight to the beach without telling his parents about it. That day was hot, but Jack didn't care he was seeking for a seashell, the best one that stupid place could offer. It was a long journey without a single moment of looking back, which led Jack to realising that he had lost his way home. He didn't even find a seashell!

"Where am I?" he asked, unnerved.

"Are you lost?" followed a moment later right behind his back.

Jack turned around and added. There was a boy with a huge green ball, just a few years older than Jack was.

"Don't worry," he said, "I'll help you!"

And he did. He helped him to rebuild his original way and even got him home, right in the hands of his parents.

"Jack will your Kitty like this seashell?" the boy asked Jack. He showed him a huge white seashell, bright and shiny. Jack took it immediately and, with his cheeks
