Fill your life with adventures, hot things

A journey is best measured in friends rather than miles. That would be the best moral of the story that happened to me and my best friend Lisa, it made me solve one of the hardest problems in my life.

It all started when we were in Arizona, travelling along the United States. We were not excited at all and wanted to try something new and unusual activity, maybe extreme in some way. And all of a sudden, Lisa stumbled upon a great hiking area on a website with travel tips. It was a unique place because of the picturesque views of the mountains and dangerous because of the deep holes among the rocks. As well, we borrowed the equipment in the nearest sport store. Lisa and I decided to go out in the early morning and get to the area by taxi. We had decided not to hire a guide as Lisa was pretty skilled in hiking, she convinced me we don't need one. She said: "There's nothing to worry about, you can count on me!"

First the way was easy. I was astonished by the views, they looked even better than online. The only problem we met while walking was the sun heat. On our way back, Lisa asked me to take photo of her sitting on the rock cliff above the abyss. I thought it would be a bit dangerous, but decided not to argue with my friend, because she would have been mad at me. But Lisa ~~over~~ slipped while sitting. I got so scared. She ~~was~~ tripped into a plant. I ran as fast I could and took her hand, but I couldn't take her on the ground as her foot was stuck ~~in~~ between two rocks. Lisa had to take off all her equipment, including backpack, boots and hiking sticks. I had to do it as well, in order to reduce the weight. I was holding her ~~to~~ with my right hand and called the police with left one.

At the end, we had to pay a bill of 2000 dollars to a store, but at least me and my only friend were ~~safe~~ alive.
