Life is full of plot twists.

Daisy used to live in a small trailer in the outskirts of Chicago. Her mum died a few years ago and her dad was a drunk who came home once a week or even more rarely. It wasn't a life for a sixteen years old girl, and only her hobby, postcrossing, could bring her some joy. One day she got a letter from her friend Lexie and couldn't believe her eyes. Lexie suggested her to move to her house in Florida and to enter an extremist driving course there. Daisy had always craved for adventures and really wanted to do this course, so she just threw all the clothes from her dresser into a suitcase and left the place that had been her jail. She eventually knew what to do and had a plan.

The plan was mediocre but crazy. Daisy wanted to hitchhike to Annapolis and had a great belief in mankind. When a lorry stopped next to her, Daisy's belief enhanced. The driver, a plumpy woman, appeared to be amiable and by the moment they got to Utah she recognized Daisy one of her biggest friends.

It'd been days before the girl got to Annapolis. You may think it was brainless of her and she was just very lucky not to face dangers all those miles. However, a journey is best measured in friends rather than miles. All the drivers Daisy had met really had cared about her future, her new friends had helped her on her way.

While Daisy was looking for Lexie's house she noticed a suspicious car that was following her. She tried to run but then her dad left the car. She was shocked when he said, "I'm sorry for leaving you, honey. I must have told you I worked as a military agent". So, now they really had to talk.
