I

It was the last time I saw him, so never will I forget his last words. I don't like to waste my time on pointless chats like Mike does, but when ^{my old friend} ~~the~~ finally returned to our hometown, I was looking forward to see him. We met at the local bar and started our conversation. Mike was speaking a lot about his job as a journalist, about cities he visited and new friends he made. He told me of his investigation of large companies' tax frauds. Mike wasn't afraid of law suits that ~~were~~ followed after he published those dangerous articles.

And there, I asked him: "Why do you even keep doing that?" He glanced at me with misunderstanding in his eyes, so I continued: "do you really prefer living in a constant rush rather than calmly existing in one place?" He answered: "Yes, I totally do! Even though I haven't got a ~~very~~ decent house or any expensive stuff, my life is just great. I fill my life with adventures!" When I said that he doesn't even go abroad in his journalist journeys, Mike answered: "A journey is best measured in friends, ~~rather than~~ rather than miles." Indeed, he meets quite a lot of people.

Although I really don't like Mike's view on life, I understood his urge for adventure. Yet, we argued a little more and concluded that we just have different personalities, Mike
