Deep into the woods.

"I can't believe we finally got a chance to explore that village!" said Mary excitedly to her friends Jack and Sarah. They were amateur anthropologists, urging to know more about indigenous South American tribes. The village of the tribe was in remote and desolate place deep in the rainforest, so journey promised to be tough.

"... food and water supplies?"

"Check".

"Torch and lighter?"

"Check".

"Map and our notebooks?"

"Check".

"Well, we should put all of this in the bags and we are ready to depart".

Friends entered the mysterious Amazon rainforest and started to go towards the village looking at the map. They carefully went through dense woods gazing amazed at extraordinary tropical flora and fauna. However, despite their beauty, some creatures were hostile to our heroes. "Watch out, a snake!" yelled Jack. The colourful reptile was approaching Sarah trying to bite her. "Aah! Don't touch me!" Sarah quickly jumped back and tripped over a fallen tree trunk. The map she was holding slipped out from her hand and fell into the river. Sarah tried to grab it, but flow was too fast and the map instantly disappeared in muddy water.

They were lost in the jungle. Friends decided not to risk and turned back trying to find way out of the forest. "Now we turn left", said Mary. "No, we have to turn right", argued Sarah. "We'll never get out of there like this", muttered Jack. "We need to think logically. Village is on the south, so we have to go north. Remember, our teacher told us how to find the north side", said he to the girls.

They found the signs and advanced to the exit. "I remember that tree! Now we go left", said Mary. "I can see the city! Come on go right", said Sarah. Finally, they found the right way out and safely exited the forest. 300

"A journey is best measured in friends rather than miles. Well, it's true. Friends didn't explored the village, ~~but they~~ but they had a great time together and by cooperated work they managed to find a way out of a dangerous rainforest.
