stuck in the mountains

Summer is the time of fascinating journeys to the most wonderful places in the world. I like spending summer near the sea, but this year I decided to try something new and went to a small town surrounded with mountains. That's where I met Lisa. She sat next to me in a coffee shop and suggested climbing together.

'Why not?' - I answered. I didn't mind her company.

The next day was sunny and cloudless - ~~was~~ perfect weather for climbing. Mountains seemed to be incredibly high, but with the support of Lisa I managed to learn how to climb. Suddenly the sun covered with dark clouds and a cold rain started pouring. Lisa suggested waiting until the fog disappears and the way becomes clear. Soon it started getting dark and we obviously got stuck in the mountains. I was really scared, but Lisa stayed calm. Together we made a fire to keep warm and ate some chocolate which Lisa found in her backpack. We spent all night singing our favourite songs and telling each other funny stories. Before falling asleep I ~~was~~ watched the gorgeous ~~sky~~ starry sky and felt happier than ever. Next morning Lisa took some pictures for her summer project and we returned to the town safe and sound.

That's how terrifying night in the mountains turned into the greatest party I ever had. Of course, I haven't climbed as high as I wanted to, but it doesn't matter. At least, I've made a good friend and it seems really important to me, because a journey is best measured in friends than miles.
