Tremendous trip

"I'll go for a journey!" suddenly said Tim, while thinking he was thinking about plans for a day. Tim was an eight-year-old boy with red hair and green eyes. He was rather brave and curious, but lonely. He was sent for a whole summer to his grandmother who lived in the village near a lake. There weren't his peers, only boys older than he, who didn't want to play with Tim. That's why he had to have fun with himself.

Tim had already come up with a place to go. It was a mysterious island in the middle of the lake. Tim wasn't allowed to go there, as he was too young for it. But it was vital for Tim to find out what things there were.

He built a small boat, took a little food with him, set in the boat and went. It wasn't difficult to reach the island, a distance was about 100 metres. Hardly had he arrived, Tim heard a strange noise. It seemed like ancient people were shouting and playing drums. Tim was scared for a few seconds, but he quite quietly went to discover what was going on there. He hid behind a tree and saw people dancing around a fire. Later he understood they were just boys, who dressed up in old clothes and hid their faces with masks. Tim decided to make friends with them. As soon as boys saw him they picked their toy armours. Tim was frightened, but they laughed and invited Tim to play with them. They lived in another village near this lake, they became real friends for Tim.

Although it was a small trip, Tim considered it was a great journey, as a journey is best measured in friends rather than miles.
