The day I was saved

So it started there, in the city of Khabarovsk. I got there by a plane and planned to investigate the biggest city of Far East. It was ~~the~~ ^{the time} when the city had much higher criminal rate than now. So it made dangerous situations appear pretty frequently. But it's not a ~~big~~ big problem! I'm safe and nothing bad will happen to me," I thought until that day.

It was a cold winter evening. I've been walking down the road to my house. And ~~at~~ ^{at} the exact same moment an old black car has appeared near me. I didn't even understand what happened but the next minute I found myself lying near my house with absolutely nothing in my pockets and blood coming out of my head. From this moment I had no place to come to. There was no people to help me. I was slowly dying. And this story would have ended ~~there~~ ^{right} here if Mikhail hadn't appeared. This guy got me to his home and helped me with my injuries. Ten ~~days~~ days I've been living with him. We talked a lot and when I was in condition, he even showed me ^{interesting} ~~parts~~ ^{parts} I've never heard about. After days passed we changed numbers and I continued my journey.

By this day we are great friends and remain our contact. At least one time a year we are travelling to a different Russian cities together to gain new experience and emotions. Last time we travelled he said,

"A journey is best measured in friends, rather than miles." And I totally agree with that.
